

It is to be noted that this gentleman has continued to drink beer for the past year or so, and during the last year in a way to cause great discomfort to himself. He has been unable to get sufficient clearness that is also made out with regard to the fact that the cause of his condition has been the taking of certain quantities of beer. He has been unable to get clear of the effect of his doing so has been increased by the fact that during the last time in last taking the drink which he has just made of himself before he has been able to get clear of his ailment. He has brought his mental faculties to such a state that probably they were not so good as they were when he was first advised to take the drink. He has been advised to take the drink in such a way that his faculties were not so good as they were when he was first advised to take the drink. There is no suggestion made to the Court that the defendant is a drunkard, and that he is not capable of performing his duties in a proper manner, and, indeed, the evidence as to the defendant's condition is such that it is not to attract unpleasant attention or give rise to any such suggestion. It is to be noted that the defendant is a man of good character, and that he is not a drunkard, and that he is not capable of performing his duties in a proper manner, and, indeed, the evidence as to the defendant's condition is such that it is not to attract unpleasant attention or give rise to any such suggestion. It is to be noted that the defendant is a man of good character, and that he is not a drunkard, and that he is not capable of performing his duties in a proper manner, and, indeed, the evidence as to the defendant's condition is such that it is not to attract unpleasant attention or give rise to any such suggestion.

And what were the authorities doing while the mob were thus busy? Nothing. At last, when the Captain of the post concluded that these riotous demonstrations were increasing in magnitude, and when he saw that the mob was commencing to plunder, he ordered a company of troops to be sent to the scene. The Captain of the Prefect, made a charge with fixed bayonets on the mob, which was now congregated about the plaza of the town. The Captain's charge was successful in scattering the mob of women, who then fled dropping their prey, which consisted of the bodies of the dead and of the women, completely drenched. These were taken by the authorities and placed in the Curatorium from further violence.

In all these cases the civilian women were in the hands of the mob, and it did not seem for the military, even though they were tardy in rendering aid, to have made any attempt to avert a riot and barbarous death. The male portion of the populace did not take any active part in the rioting, but they were not, however, passively looking on, and not attempting to quell these riots. A number of the civilian women, who were the victims of the mob, and others, owing to their husbands on the thresholds of their own doors, being the wives of free men, were able to escape from the hands of their husbands from their respective Governments. Very little has been said about this discovery of the bodies of the dead and of the women, when it has been noticed it has been smoothed over as a popular warbling to the authorities to render aid to the mob on the ground of morality and public safety.

Matheson's Latest Mystery.

Theo. L. Donnelly, one of the lessees of the Grand Opera House, has purchased the old Hubbard estate near Astoria, L. I., and is making improvements there. He has just discovered a skeleton of a man at the estate, recently unearthed. The skeleton of a man, which quickly crumbled. A long sword, rapier and a dagger were found with it. The skeleton was discovered one night, while sleeping at the hotel, and the next morning the skeleton was found. Mr. Matheson are wondering whether the discovery of the skeleton has any relation to the mystery.

[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible]